History of Lindsey Wilson College

From its beginning, Lindsey Wilson College has defined its mission in terms of serving the educational needs of south central Kentucky, a predominantly rural region with a legacy of cultural isolation and persistent economic and educational underachievement that, unfortunately, characterizes much of Appalachia. The College has struggled to fulfill its mission in spite of chronic financial problems that have, at times, threatened its survival. Today, Lindsey Wilson College has not only survived, but thrives as a financially secure institution with a growing reputation as a place of academic excellence and spiritual integrity that reflects the Methodist denomination's historical commitment to higher education. Indeed, it is no exaggeration to say that Lindsey Wilson College is an institution on the rise, with its best days lying ahead of it.

Lindsey Wilson College was founded in September 1903 as Lindsey Wilson Training School. The school was named in memory of Lindsey Wilson, the deceased nephew and stepson of Catherine Wilson of Louisville, Kentucky, who was an early benefactor of the school.

In its early years, Lindsey Wilson primarily served as a regional preparatory "feeder" school for Vanderbilt University, which was Methodism's leading institutions of higher education in the South during the first decade of the twentieth century. In 1923, Lindsey Wilson achieved junior college status.

Defying improbable odds and a near-miss closure vote by the Louisville Annual Conference of the Methodist Church in the 1940s, the fledgling junior college survived both the Great Depression and World War II. In 1951, the College received its initial accreditation from the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools and has continuously maintained its accreditation status through successive review cycles. Even so, the College's future was not assured until after the arrival of Dr. John B. Begley, who assumed the presidency in 1977 and served in that capacity until 1997.

Under Begley's leadership, the College began to offer a baccalaureate curriculum in 1985, a master's program in Counseling and Human Development in 1993, and became one of the fastestgrowing four-year private liberal arts colleges in Kentucky. The College's ascendancy not only has continued, but has accelerated during the tenure of Begley's successor, Dr. William T. Luckey, Jr., who observed in his 2000 inaugural address that "this College has never been stronger than it is today."

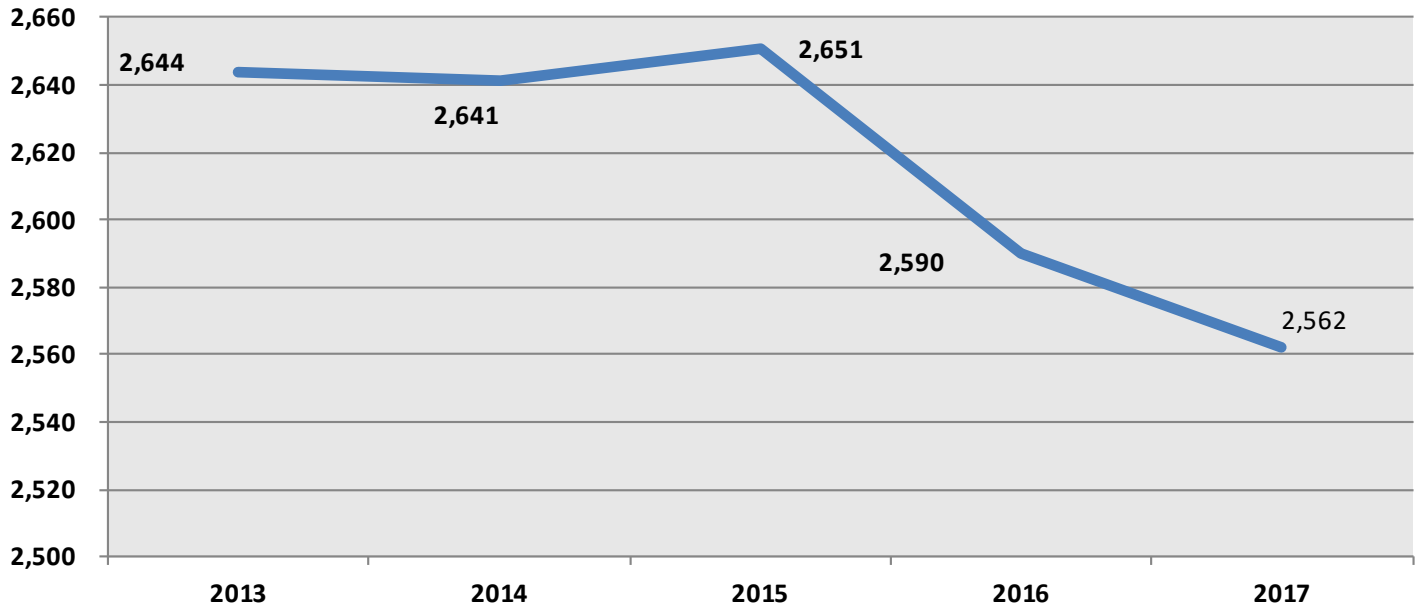

Anchored firmly in its historical commitment to "education as transformation," Lindsey Wilson College is now regarded as Methodism's flagship institution of higher education in Kentucky. The College has attracted a student body whose defining characteristic is uniquely local and global which creates a vibrant climate of enriching cultural diversity amidst an otherwise homogeneous geographical region. For all, the College remains steadfast in its mission to serve the educational needs of students by providing a living-learning environment within an atmosphere of active caring and Christian concern where every student, every day, learns and grows and feels like a real human being.
